Everyone is Selling Something!

We sell ourselves to our friends, loved ones, children, co-workers, teachers, neighbors, employers and clients on an every day basis. We want them to “buy” our ideas, our values, our thoughts, a relationship with us, our products and services. We are people interacting with people in order to survive and thrive during our lifetimes.

If interactions with others are so important to our success and happiness in life, why aren't more of us investing time and effort in learning “people skills?”

For most, it's simply that they aren't paying attention. Generally, we all interact with people the same way every day, giving little thought to what we're saying or how we say it. We're on automatic pilot. We don't even understand the power and value of using better communication skills.

That's where Tom Hopkins comes in. Tom has been a student of words and a wordsmith since beginning his career in selling at a very young age. He noticed how people responded differently to his requests just by changing a few words here and there.

Today, he teaches those simple, practical people skills in a fun manner to thousands of business professionals, students, salespeople, educators and fellow speakers around the world. Why not have
